

Everyone should have a will. But do you really need to see a lawyer to get yours done?

Maybe you found a will kit online, or simply wrote your own. It's free, but buyer beware - you get what you pay for!

Our provincial legislation allows for handwritten wills, but with strict requirements. Will kits may not consider your unique circumstances. Without proper advice and drafting, these documents may not address all issues. A court dispute after death because of ambiguity or improper understanding of legal terms can cause chaos for those left behind, and cost so much more than the cost of a professionally drafted will.

The question isn't whether you can write your own will, but whether you should. To make sure your last wishes are legally binding and ensure your estate can be dealt with efficiently, we always recommend consulting a lawyer. Call for an appointment today!
